The consequences of a major pandemic would be world-changing.

The 1918 flu pandemic killed 50 million to 100 million people—at the top end, more than the combined total casualties of World Wars I and II.
Emerging and Re-Emerging Infections: Role of National Public Health Institutions